The Utrecht Young Academy declares Climate Crisis

The Utrecht Young Academy, a group of hundreds of academics from the Netherlands and abroad, discusses the legacy of the fall of the Berlin Wall in 1989. Which promises of the cold war, both abroad and in the Netherlands, have been fulfilled? Which ones are still being kept? And which ones were ended?

In Fall 2019, UYA collaborated with Studium Generale on two lecture series. Missed a lecture? You can watch a recording through Studium Generale’s website.

Collaborations with Studium Generale

In Fall 2019-2020, collaborations with Studium Generale on lecture series, such as a series of public events, are currently being developed. More to be announced soon.

In line with our declaration of the Climate Crisis, climate-related projects, such as a series of public events, are currently being developed. More to be announced soon.

True or False? is sugar always sweet?

In the Utrecht Young Academy lecture series ‘True or False’, scientist Susanne Knittel and sociologist Tim van der Velde discuss how sweet? can experience how interesting and fun science can be. In six multidisciplinary lectures, guests from different fields of research, such as psychology, chemistry and geology share their experiences with the audience.

The Utrecht Young Academy gives a voice to young academics by reaching out to policymakers within and outside Utrecht. Within five years, the Academy has grown in number of members and projects.

The Utrecht Young Academy newsletter: Fall 2019

Organised by UYA’s third generation.

End of the Cold War have been ful

Some books turn the world upside down. These are works that are often brought back to life after having been banned or otherwise silenced. How can young professionals and citizens contribute to the current debate on the politics of remembering and forgetting? Can we ever really judge art and cultural production that can be interpreted in so many different ways? In the final lecture in the UYA lecture series ‘Can we ever really judge art?’, UYA members will share their perspectives and conclusions.

A Voice for Young Academics

The Utrecht Young Academy gives a voice to young academics by reaching out to policymakers within and outside Utrecht. Within five years, the Academy has grown in number of members and projects. In our self-evaluation report, we have an eye out for...