

Abstract

This paper analyses the relation between public pensions, fertility and child care in a closed economy OLG-model with endogenous fertility. It is shown that it is optimal to introduce child allowances if the government redistributes income from the young to the old, and rises when longevity increases